New Company Dedicated to Build Software Solutions That Will Help Industries Practice Sustainable Product Development

San Jose, CA, May 22, 2015 --(PR.com)-- ViridisChem, Inc. a software company located in San Jose, CA is a dynamic new company built with a mission to provide software solutions to help scientists within pharmaceutical, agrochemical, petrochemical and consumer industry define environmentally friendly product development processes that are greener, safer, and economical. The company has already developed first-in-market rich chemical database with full chemical and hard to find toxicological profiles of over 60 million chemicals, as well as a reaction database with over 10 million reference reactions with pre-analyzed green-scores. This will be the foundation on which number of products targeted for specific customer needs will be built.

"Everyone is talking about the need to adopt environmentally friendly product development processes. But without the easy availability of relevant data and the tools that can help you guide through difficult to understand toxicological implications, scientists are left with the heavy burden of tedious and time-consuming task of evaluating their current processes and identifying areas of improvement," said the founder and CEO of ViridisChem.

ViridisChem is founded by a serial entrepreneur Neelam Vaidya with over 25 years of industry experience in both biotech and high-tech industries and enjoys the full support of a strong advisory board that includes industry experts. Stay tuned to hear about ViridisChem's new products and services in coming months.
